

A 'FRESH' PERSPECTIVE

Want to eat food that is fresh, local and cooked from scratch? Then try Buffalo Crossings Assisted Living community, a restaurant-style dining experience that features many upscale dishes like seared salmon, grilled ribeye steak, prime rib, and French onion beef brisket. Our menu is catered around our residents who participate in a weekly menu chat.

Buffalo Crossings Resident "Bill Nisbet" counts on having dinner with the same group of friends every evening. "We're almost like a family," he says, as his friends nod in agreement.

"Everything is fresh," he says. "Soups made from scratch. And they change the menu so often. I mean, if you were at home cooking, you wouldn't have that many choices."

This evening the choices are hibachi grilled pork tenderloin over ginger apples, baked ham with raisin sauce or a heart-healthy tropical rum glazed shrimp. There's also a selection of soups, salads and sides. Or try your favorite comfort foods on our everyday menu and a dessert from our ever changing dessert cart of homemade delights by Chef Jean. It's all been made a few yards away in the Buffalo Crossings kitchen, under the supervision of executive chef Al Gabianelli.

"You can get an idea of what we're all about," he says, stepping into the big walk-in refrigerator. There are shelves upon shelves here of fresh vegetables, fruit, dairy products and meat.

"We don't use a ton of frozen product here," he explains. "That's the versatility of being with Buffalo Crossings and their whole fresh approach." Al has been in the culinary business for over 37 years and graduated from the Culinary Institute of America in New York where he also taught for 2 years. After working as a traveling district manager helping struggling dietary departments in healthcare he decided to make it his life's passion. "I really liked the residents," he says. "It was like being around your grandmother all the time."
